

“I have long believed in 3 types of giving - current operations, endowment funds to provide for even funding over time and planned giving so that individuals can share some of their good fortune with charitable organizations other than the beneficiaries when they pass away. This commit accomplished by either leaving legacy gifts in wills or buying insurance where the community is named as the beneficiary. This legacy gift builds on the third of the three referenced above.

My hope for Jewish Ottawa 25 years now is that there is a buildup of the assets of the Ottawa Jewish Community Foundation such that there isn't as much of reliance on the annual campaign to fund the needs of the community beneficiary agencies.”
