

Courtesy of Bruce Levin

- Were there parts of the book that you related to in particular? How so?
- What behaviors have you adopted from your parents and have tried to carry forth to your children?
- There were quite a few passages from the Torah in the book! Are there any particular ones that drew your attention, that you related to?
- What do you think the Torah symbolizes in today's Jewish American life?
- Have your parents shared a lot of their stories with you over the years? If so, how if at all have you tried to preserve them and keep these stories alive?
- Have you ever taken a meaningful road trip with your parents? What do you feel you got out of it, or what feelings did it leave you with?
- For those who have deceased parent(s):
  - Have you ever thought about your parents' legacies?
  - Did the book stir up reflections of your own parents legacies?
  - How do you remember them by?
  - Is there anything you have in your possession as a legacy for your parents?
  - How would they would want you to remember them by?
  - How about for yourself? How would you want people to remember you by?
  - Have your parents ever come alive for you?
  - Are there times when you feel they are there with you? When do you feel their presence?
  - How do you try to keep them alive in your life?
  - Have you every pretended that they are there with you?
  - When/what specific occasions or moments do you tend to reflect on them?
  - Is there a favorite place perhaps that reminds you of them or that you associate with them?
  - Do you sometimes bring them back in your mind for advice or help you in some way?
  - If you had an opportunity to take your deceased parent(s) along on a road trip with you:
    - Where would you go?
    - What would you want to talk about? What would you say to them?
  - What would you say to them that you wish you said to them when they were alive?