

Fighting for Freedom: Why Keeping the Separation Between Religion and Government is an American Imperative

A Morning with Rachel Laser

Rachel Laser is President and CEO at Americans United for Separation of Church and State; a lawyer, advocate and strategist who has dedicated her career to making our country more inclusive. She has a proven track record of uniting both faith and secular leaders and advocacy organizations to make tangible progress on some of the most important issues of our time.

As a member of a religious minority – she was raised as a Reform Jew – she understands how much it matters that our laws treat everyone fairly and equally. She knows the work of Americans United has never been more important than it is today, as she continues the fight to defeat the many new and serious threats to religious freedom and the separation of church and state.

Prior to Americans United, Ms. Laser was deputy director of the Religious Action Center of Reform Judaism (the RAC), working to further its historic mission of strengthening the separation of religion and government. She also ran interfaith campaigns on a number of critical issues, including LGBTQ equality, immigration reform, gun violence prevention, and paid sick, family and medical leave.
